

Anteneh Melaku Yohannes, a graduate research assistant with the Intermodal Freight and Transportation Institute at the University of Memphis. He is currently attaining his Masters of Civil Engineering at the University of Memphis with a concentration on Transportation.

Prior to beginning his research with IFTI, he received his Bachelor's of Science in Construction Technology and Management from Addis Ababa University. After he received his bachelor, Anteneh has undertaken a fulltime job with a general contractor company as a site engineer. His position has enabled him to develop not only specific engineering industry competencies, but also a valuable set of transferable skill sets which will help him to excel in any job.

He enjoys soccer, physical fitness, watching movies, swimming and biking in addition to his studies.