

Golnaz Sarram is a graduate research assistant with the Intermodal Freight Transportation Institute (IFTI) at the University of Memphis. She is currently attaining Doctorate of Civil Engineering at the university with a concentration in transportation. Prior to beginning her research with IFTI, she received her masters of Science degrees in Civil Engineering from the Iran University of Science and Technology where she specialized in Geotechnical Engineering.

During investigating at the IUST Geoenvironmental Laboratory Golnaz shared her research experience in some national publications and conferences. After graduation she could also captured a teaching experience in Azad University for instructing several Civil Engineering courses such as Structural Analysis as a faculty advisor. Besides, she had the opportunity to work in some projects in a Consultant Engineering Corporation regarded to Hydrogeological studies of Water transmission and Water resources studies.

Golnaz is a kind and considerate Persian girl, who enjoys cycling, swimming, painting, theater and traveling in addition to her studies.